FEDERAL BUDGET MEASURE SEEMS CERTAIN TO PASS

Officials of the Treasury Department are convinced that the pres-

In the matter of departmental es-timates, however, there is no check except as may be made by the com-mittees of Congress, which must rely solely upon the representations of the parties submitting the estimates. The department heads forward their estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he, in turn, transmits them to Congress as a mere formality.

a mere formality.

The prevailing policy of paying out government moneys is likened by Treasury officials to the method of Treasury officials to the method of an indulgent parent who supplies his children with books full of signed checks, with the spaces for the amounts left vacant. They spend as freely as they may see fit, with no concern as to value received, and the parent must keep in constant communication with his bank to see that his balance is on the right side of the ledger.

The greatest advantage to be gained.

The greatest advantage to be gained The greatest advantage to be gained through a budget system, in the opinion of the Treasury Department, is the supervision which shall be exercised to see that outlays are wisely made and the results are commensurate with the expenditures.

To accomplish these reforms, according to these officials, the budget system about a results are considered.

system should provide machinery to scrutinize closely all estimates before they are transmitted to Congress, and then exert a careful watch to prerent unnecessary or unwise outlays.

This duty could be assigned either to the President or to the Secretary of the Treasury. A large force of financial and economical experts would be required.

Both the Republican and Democratic parties declared for a budget system in the platforms adopted at their last national conventions.
